

Thursday, 14th NovemberEmbracing Weaknesses/ Degrowth

focuses on the dysfunctional and toxic capitalocene life and production forms that appeared as weaknesses in our society as the pandemic led to socio-economic collapses all over Berlin and internationally. Measures of degrowth need to replace existing dogmas of expansion and growth! Degrowth is an economic and social temperament that encourages economic and productive deceleration. To degrow and to embrace the weaknesses in our neighbourhood and own life requires a fundamental change in awareness, values and habitus.

Övül Ö. Durmuşoğlu, Ute Müller-Tischler, Solvej Helweg Ovesen, Kathrin Pohlmann

Övül Ö. Durmuşoğlu is part of the SoS (Soft Solidarity) – Assembly team, visiting professor at the Graduate School at UDK, a curator, writer and educator living in Berlin. Ute Müller-Tischler studied and received her doctorate at the Humboldt University of Berlin in the field of Art studies and aesthetics. Until 2002 she was the curator and artistic director of Galerie im Parkhaus Berlin and at the Kunst- und Medienzentrum. Together with Gerrit Gohlke she directed the Brandenburg Art Association Potsdam (2005 - 2007). The Red Wedding

Gerhild Komander

Rote Wedding wrote one of the most famous chapters in Berlin history. The history of Red Wedding begins as early as the 19th century and covers the entire area of Wedding that was built up at that time: the SPD's voter potential lived there.

Gerhild H. M. Komander, art historian and historian, works as a scientific author, publicist, lecturer and tour guide. Her publications currently focus on Berlin art history, history and topography, and the history of women. As an expert for Berlin and Brandenburg, she organizes topographical, women's history and architectural history city tours.

Or Solidarity

Bini Adamczak

The real atmosphere of solidarity in life is not the togetherness of I and you, which is the home of most ethics and moral theories, but the threesomeness, fourfold, multiplicity of a more extravagant context.

Bini Adamczak (Berlin) works as a philosopher and artist. Most recently she published “Der schönste Tag im Leben des Alexander Berkman. Vom möglichen Gelingen der Russischen Revolution” (2017, “The Most Beautiful Day in Alexander Berkman’s Life. On the Possible Success of the Russian Revolution”) in the edition assemblage and “Beziehungsweise Revolution. 1917, 1968 und kommende” (2017, “Or Rather Revolution. 1917, 1968 and coming”) in the edition suhrkamp.

Convention of Women Farmers and Ecological FeministsMarwa Arsanios

Taking the convention that happened in June 2019 in the context of the Warsaw Biennial as a starting point, I would like to question the potential and limits of setting up such a project in an art context. How to maintain alliances and what to do beyond knowledge exchange and transmission?

Marwa Arsanios is an artist, filmmaker and researcher. She is currently completing her phd in practice at the Akademie der Bildenden Kunst in Vienna, and is a tutor at the Dutch Art Institute. She is one of the co-founders of 98weeks research project in Beirut (2007-2017)

Lecture

keeping oneself knottedNatascha Sadr Haghghian

Elizabeth Povinelli refers to collectivity as a knot and she points at the straining forces that decapacitate ones ability to keep oneself knotted. How to knot, how to keep oneself knotted -to think and form self-organized collectivity- is a central question of this talk. Taking artists practice as a point of departure it asks: What are the straining forces that untie the knots and why are certain spaces better in maintaining forms of collectivity?

Natascha Sadr Haghghian (*1967 in Zurich) studied stage and costume design at the Hochschule der Künste in Berlin from 1989 to 1995 with Dieter Schnebel (music theater, Fluxus) and Maria Vedder (electronic stage design and video), among others. Since 2002 she has been working with various Berlin video artists, composers and sound artists and has also developed a series of solo performances. Sadr Haghghian received scholarships in Basel (2003) and at NADINE - Center for Performance and New Media in Brussels (2004). Her works have been shown in Berlin, Hanover, Hamburg, Frankfurt, Paris, Brussels, Rome and Buenos Aires.

How to bridge the Distances: Strategies of Solidarity in Times of Need

Ana Alenso, Eli Cortiñas, VOCES de Guatemala en Berlín

Moderation

Paz Guevara

Ana Alenso's artistic work in the fields of sculpture, photography, installation, sound and video aims to show the global ecological, social and economic risks and consequences of extractivist practices. Through the use of industrial materials, her work identifies critical states - situations of precariousness and tension - in a poetic register.

Eli Cortiñas is a video artist of Cuban descent, born in the Canary Islands. Her work has been exhibited in numerous institutions such as Museum Ludwig, Kunsthalle Budapest, SCHIRN Kunsthalle, SAVVY Contemporary, Museum Marta Herford, Kunstraum Innsbruck, Centre Georges Pompidou, Museum of Modern Art Moscow, CAC Vilnius, Kunstmuseum Bonn and Pinakothek der Moderne et al. Her artistic practice can be located within the appropriation tradition, using already existing cinema to de- and reconstruct identities as well as narratives according to feminist and anti hegemonic discourses.

VOCES de Guatemala en Berlín is a political collective of migrants from Guatemala living in Berlin. With conversations and political-artistic actions, we try to weave connections between struggles here and there. Our path towards a migrant civil society is accompanied by various activists whose endeavours we support.

Paz Guevara is a curator, researcher and author. She works at Haus der Kulturen der Welt in Berlin on the long-term project "Kanon-Fragen" that questions dominant cultural narratives, where she curated exhibitions and conferences, and contributed to the exhibition "Past Disquiet" with research on South American artists and museums involved in the solidarity movement.

We generate safe spaces of encounter for the free development of the body and the genre. Taking elements of the dance, the performance and the visual arts, we develop scenic pieces that are interrogated by the differences or similarities between the contemporary art and the spectacle, we transit by conventional scenes and non habitual spaces in the circulation of the alive arts.

Which structural insights from the microcosm of the district of Wedding are applicable to the macrocosm of European society and the other way around? Which notions of diversity and integration need to be deconstructed in order to recompose them - and how can we support each other in the future, taking the meeting as a starting point? Solidarity is our PracticeStrategies of Self-organisation and Solidarity in Wedding

BASTA!, Cralle Kollektiv, FAU Berlin, Hände weg vom Wedding, YAAR e.v.

Moderation

Carrie Hampel, Kathrin Pohlmann

A moderated exchange with local initiatives & self-organized collectives from Berlin Wedding about the continuous struggle against exploitation, exclusion and discrimination within existing and (not only due to the pandemic) worsening social inequalities and structures. How can and must we organize heterogeneous solidarity networks and practices in order to bring about social change together through the targeted empowerment of marginalized subjects and groups and to overcome and/or even abolish patriarchal, capitalist and discriminatory structures.

Who are we?

We are the unemployment initiative Basta! We are a group of people with low income. We advise and accompany ourselves in case of problems with public offices. Solidarity is our practice. Together we strive to eliminate inequalities.

The women* pub collective 'Café Cralle' in Wedding emerged from the Women's Movement and was founded in 1977 and is organized in collective self-administration. It is an explicitly political place for networking, relaxation and celebration. Love, liquor and revolution!

The Freie Arbeiterinnen- und Arbeiter-Union (FAU) Berlin is a basic trade union. A central component of its self-image is solidarity. The FAU relies on the quick mobilization of its members and thus contradicts - in a practical way - the logic of capitalist competition.

Hände weg vom Wedding ("Hands off Wedding") is a left-wing neighbourhood group in the north of Berlin. Since 2012 we have been organizing against the sell-out of Wedding and other social grievances in our neighborhood. Currently we are working on the following topics: exorbitant rents, feminism, labor struggles and anti-fascism.

YAAR e.V. is an association of friends, who have been involved in helping refugees from Afghanistan on a voluntary basis since 2012, and since 2016 through grants. Yaar is Persian and has many meanings. In various cultures and languages, from today's Turkey to the Indian subcontinent, the term is used as a synonym for a special and kind person.

Carrie Hampel is a journalist, writer and interdisciplinary artist. In 2017-18 Carrie conducted extensive statistical research and vox-populi interviews in Wedding, revealing high levels of felt solidarity and the common experience of statistically evident socio-economic disadvantage.

Weak resistance as soft solidarity. A feminist view.

Ewa Majewska

The soft solidarity can perhaps be seen as a version of what I earlier called „weak resistance“. Refusing easy associations with the hegemonic, heroic versions of political solidarity, its softness emphasizes the other versions of agency, those focusing on the everyday, common, caring and shared by many.

Dr Ewa Majewska – is a feminist philosopher and activist, living in Warsaw, lecturer at the Art Academy in Szczecin. She was a visiting fellow at the University of California, Berkeley; ICI Berlin and IWM in Vienna. She published four books and some 50 articles and essays, in journals, magazines and collected volumes, including: e-flux, Third Text, Journal of Utopian Studies

Politicized and Depoliticized Solidarity

Yassin Al Haj Saleh

We are in a global crisis, one of loss of direction. Our problems, environmental degradation, pandemics, the Islamic Question and many others, are global and we are not dealing with them as such. A global society is the right response to the situation. Solidarity can be a power for imagining new society/societies. We need a critique of the present forms of solidarity for us to develop new ones.

Yassin Al Haj Saleh was a political prisoner between 1980 and 1996 for being a member in a communist party opposing the regime of Hafez Assad. A journalist, writing in newspapers and magazines in the Arab World (never in Syria). The author of 7 books in Arabic, whose topics are: Syria, Jail, contemporary Islam, culture and intellectuals, the Syrian revolution.

From System Relevance to System Criticism: Artistic Solidarities

Lynhan Balatbat-Helbock, bi'bak, Klaus Lederer, Marina Naprushkina, Solvej Helweg Ovesen, Christopher Weickenmeier

Moderation

Zoë Claire Miller

What are we doing to mitigate the long-term consequences of the Corona crisis for cultural workers? Currently, shopping malls and commercial art galleries are allowed to stay open, but museums and municipal galleries are not - why not the other way around? What could a bottom-up plan of the different exhibition spaces in Berlin and Wedding look like? And what could a cultural policy plan for the immediate future of the visual arts in Berlin look like? How could the city and initiatives like the SoS Assembly continue to work together to develop near future-oriented and system-critical visions - beyond the pandemic? How do we establish/maintain art as systemically relevant and how do we preserve the basic right to freedom of speech and art?

Lynhan Balatbat-Helbock is a curator and researcher at SAVVY Contemporary where she is part of the participatory archive project Colonial Neighbours. She received her MA in Postcolonial Cultures and Global Policy at Goldsmiths University of London. In her work within the permanent collection of SAVVY Contemporary she looks for colonial traces that are manifested in our present.

bi'bak (Turkish: Look) is a project space based in Berlin-Wedding, focusing on transnational narratives, migration, global mobility and its aesthetic dimensions. bi'bak's interdisciplinary program operates at the interface of art, science and community and includes film screenings and exhibitions, workshops as well as musical and culinary excursions.

Klaus Lederer (Senator for Culture and Europe): I have one of the best jobs Berlin has to offer. And I mean it! We are fighting for cultural spaces and diversity, for more offers especially for younger people, and easier access for everyone to all forms of art and culture. We stand for minimum social standards - before, on and behind the stages, the galleries and studios, because art is work.

Marina Naprushkina (born in Minsk, Belarus) works mostly outside institutional spaces, in collaboration with communities and activist organizations. In 2007 Naprushkina founded the Office for Antipropaganda - a platform for artistic and activist activities dealing with the topic of political propaganda. In 2013 she initiated Neue Nachbarschaft/Moabit in Berlin.

Christopher Weickenmeier is the artistic director of Klosterruine Berlin. He has collaborated with i.a. Ariel Efraim Ashbel, Beth Collar, Natalie Czech, Johanna Hedva, Catalina Insignares, Magdalena M. Los, Raimundas Malašauskas, Luzie Meyer, Mårten Spangberg, Anna M. Szaflarski, Sung Tieu, Else Tunemyr and Mirjam Thomann. He is currently interested in negative affects, messy performance and weak exhibitions.

Zoë Claire Miller lives and works in Berlin as an artist and organizer. She founded the Society for Matriarchal World Domination in 2019, co-founded the Berlin Art Prize in 2013, and has been a spokesperson for the bbk berlin (professional association of visual artists) since 2016. She was nominated for the Hans Purrmann prize in 2020, and regularly exhibits in Germany and abroad.

What spaces are now unsafe and which ones are safer physically, economically, politically or institutionally? This program aims to grasp and raise awareness of the body in the political and public sphere as well as to map the zones of its neglect. Can we accept the unsafety of life in general and create more safety and intimacy for each other at the same time?

On Being Excluded

On EXCLUSION and the Call for Solidarity

Dr. Jérémy Geeraert, Katja Kajikhina, Arlette-Louise Ndakoze, Seebrücke

Moderation

Nastaran Tajeri Foumani

What does it mean to be excluded from supply and health care systems? Where are the connections between structural discrimination/racism and illness/death? Why do so-called "open" and democratic societies criminalize sea rescuers and refugees? Which resistant strategies are developing despite or because of the crisis/s? Do we need new concepts of solidarity and protest that move beyond white discourses and hegemonic knowledge structures of the so-called "global North"? How can the singularity of the body/subject and its vulnerability become the object of new forms of knowledge beyond the rhetoric of a class society that relies on exclusion? What do we need to stop deadly social structures and policies?

Dr. Jérémy Geeraert is a social scientist at the Institute for European Ethnology at Humboldt University. His research focuses on access to health care, migration and the health system. In addition to his scientific activities, he has been active at Medibüro Berlin since 2017.

Katja Kajikhina is a scientist in the Department of Social Determinants of Health at the Robert Koch-Institute. She holds a doctorate in biomedical basic research, study of public health with a focus on epidemiology, health systems and global health. She conducts research on migration, discrimination and health, is active in various contexts in the field of anti-racism and works as translator and language mediator.

As a philosopher, fiction writer, and curator, Arlette-Louise Ndakoze researches on pan-African sciences and their forms of mediation. She focuses on the connection between text and sound, in the broader sense the one between spiritual-immaterial and physical-material spheres - those spaces of possibility in the making. She is a member of SAVVY Contemporary.

Seebrücke is an international movement, supported by several civil society alliances and people. We declare our solidarity with people who are forced to flee their homes. From German and European policy makers, we demand the establishment of safe routes for refugees, to stop the criminalisation of sea rescue and to receive them in a humane way whilst respecting their rights.

Nastaran Tajeri-Foumani is ex-social worker, activist, musician, moderator and lecturer*researcher. N. works in the field of anti racism and anti discriminatory practice. N. moderates for Berlinale Panorama Section and is programming and curating for the Xposed International QUEER Film Festival.

Re-Generation: How do we care?

Berlin Biennale (Lisette Lagnado, María Berríos), Extinction Rebellion, Feminist Health Care Research Group, Stine Marie Jacobsen

Moderation

Solvej Helweg Ovesen

What could be the long term traumas of the pandemic experience for those who are socio-economically vulnerable or belong to risk groups? How do we learn to share vulnerability and interdependency among each other?

"The crack begins within" was the title of the 11th Berlin Biennale, which just ended: But is it possible to heal together across borders? If yes, how? What can the various roles of art biennials and organizations like Extinction Rebellion and Feminist Healthcare Research Group be? What can be an ethic of participation when working with outreach and vulnerable groups, f.e. artists? And is this ethic translatable to how we care and share solidarity with someone else? We all talk about care these days, but do we actually know how to care in a diverse city?

Lisette Lagnado is an art critic and holds a PhD in Philosophy from the University of São Paulo. She worked as editor of the magazines "Arte em São Paulo" in the 1980s, "trópico" (2001-2010) and "marcelina" (2008-2012). She is currently one of the four curators of the 11th Berlin Biennial (2020).

María Berríos is a sociologist, writer, independent curator, and cofounder of the Chilean editorial collective vaticanochico. Her work traverses art, culture, and politics with a special interest in the collective experiments of the "Third World" movement and their exhibition formats in the 1960s and 70s. She teaches and lectures regularly and has published extensively in Latin America and beyond.

Florinn Bareth is rebelling against ecological collapse and climate crisis with Extinction Rebellion since spring 2019. Extinction Rebellion is a decentralised, international and politically non-partisan movement using non-violent direct action and civil disobedience to persuade governments to act justly on the Climate and Ecological Emergency.

Florinn originally has a background in film, art and the humanities before switching to work for (so-called) sustainability and in Corporate Social Responsibility in 2012. In 2015 she founded an online magazine for a conscious lifestyle, but soon realized it needed more radical action in the fight against accelerating climate change. During week days Florinn is responsible for Community & Concept Development at bUm Berlin, a solidarity based coworking and event-space for the socially committed civil society, nonprofit organizations, volunteer engagement and activism.

As an artistic research project, the Feminist Health Care Research Group (Inga Kalee Zimprich/Julia Bonn) founded in 2015, creates installations, workshops, and zines, with the aim to create space to share vulnerability, and to build an accessible resource of self-empowering, emancipatory approaches to healthcare. www.feministische-recherchegruppe.org

Stine Marie Jacobsen is a conceptual artist working to decode violence and law both individually and collectively through participatory means. She lives and works in Copenhagen and Berlin, graduated from the Royal Danish Academy of Fine Arts with an MFA in 2009 and a BFA from CalArts, the California Institute of the Arts, Los Angeles, USA in 2007.
